Video Book Trailers

Frequently Asked Questions

What if I already have some video clips that I'd like added to my trailer? Could I submit them, and would that change the price?

Answer: Yes, you can submit video clips to be added in your trailer and no, this does not change the price. If you order a trailer that is 30 seconds long, but your video clip is 15 seconds long, the remaining time that you will have for your commercial will be 15 seconds. The total time frame of the video ordered is not changed by the submission of previously recorded materials.

2. I saw that some of your least expensive packages were listed as Designer Directed. What does Designer Directed mean, and why are they less expensive?

Answer: Designer Directed means that the designer (Anointed Fire™) will design the video without any instruction from the customer. Don't worry; we are workers of excellence. These videos are less expensive than Customer Directed trailers because we already have a library of video clips, or can access certain clips easily. This is more cost effective for us, and it saves us less time. When the customer directs the design, we will either have to search for and buy every clip or record the clip (which requires hiring actors and actresses), and then bring the clips together the way the customer instructs. Of course, such requests could end up costing thousands of dollars and we couldn't offer our affordable rates with such a request.

3. Will you upload the video clip to YouTube for me, or will you simply email me the video?

Answer: Both. We upload the video to our channel to display in our portfolio, and at the same time, we email you the original video to post on YouTube and other sites.

4. I like the voice overs in the clips shown. Can I have a voice over added to my video, and is that extra?

Answer: Most definitely. Check out our package add-ons for more information. You can even choose the accent and gender of the speaker.

5. Can I choose the race or gender of the actors in my video?

Answer: Of course. When you order Designer Directed, however, we put the movie together without any design advice from you (the customer), but if we use any video clip, we will ask you your preference.
